Moving Forward with PFM reforms in Developing Countries: a learning and experience-sharing event for senior managers and advisers

COURSE OVERVIEW

Meeting the challenges of PFM reform ...

Governments all around the world are struggling to upgrade their Public Finance Management systems so as to deliver high class services with limited resources. Under conflicting pressures from anxious political leaders, truculent civil servants and demanding international agencies, progress can often be elusive. Yet some countries are succeeding. What is their secret and can those successes be duplicated?

... and sharing the lessons of experience

The road to reform is inevitably rocky but recent research is providing tentative answers to such questions. This course brings together reformers and advisers to learn from these international experiences and to share their own knowledge within a conducive learning environment.

TRAINING TEAM

Andrew Lawson will be the principal facilitator of the 5 day event, drawing on over 25 years of international experience of public finance issues, as an adviser, evaluator and researcher.

Matt Andrews, Associate Professor of the Kennedy School of Government, University of Harvard, and author of The Limits of Institutional Reform in Development, will be among a number of guest speakers, making presentations and participating in discussions.

Senior managers and coordinators of PFM reforms from different countries have already booked their places and a stimulating mix of participants is guaranteed.
