

Cards for Humanity

Have you heard of the Cards Against Humanity game?

Well, the objective of the Cards for Humanity is not to pull the worse features out of your human race fellows but quite the opposite: it is to start thinking about the best ways one can contribute to the common good!

The mechanics of the game are simple:

- a host or 'master of ceremonies' is required, to pose each question (on a screen, projection or computer) to the players.
- three (3) players or three teams of players receive a set of cards with answers.
- choose how many questions will be the round (3 to 8, not too long) and start with one question.
- all the players/teams choose one answer from their set of cards that is the best answer (either a serious contribution for achieving the SDG or an answer with a twist ;)
- the host decides which player gave the best answer and attributes one point.
- at the end of the agreed round there may be a winner, but the goal is to start a conversation about each of the SDGs.
